but representatives of the Heaton family there reside, the community having its own school, electric plant and other modern improvements.

CHARLES LEGER is a mining engineer by profession, has had many interesting experiences in the mining districts of the Rocky Mountain region, and has been a factor in opening up and developing the mineral resources of the West.

Mr. Leger is a resident of Helper, where he has a profitable business, known as the Central Commission Supply Company, of which he is owner.

He was born at Louisville, Colorado, August 31, 1886, son of Stephen and Aline Leger. His father was a miner by occupation. Charles Leger grew up in the atmosphere of the mining industry, attending the public schools of Carbon County, Utah, and the School of Mines, University of Utah. He was graduated with the degree Mining Engineer in 1908 and for twenty years most of his time was devoted to his professional work. He has had an extensive experience in the copper and other metal mining districts of Utah, Arizona and Nevada. After 1913 most of his technical service was in coal mine development. He was employed as an engineer by various companies operating in the Carbon County fields, including the United States Fuel Company. He opened the Royal and Liberty mines and later the properties of the Blue Blaze Coal Company.

In connection with his professional duties he established a lumber yard at Helper in 1925, and is still selling lumber and carries on an extensive business under the name of the Central Commission Supply Company.

He is a past president and director of the Kiwanis Club, a member of Price Lodge No. 1550, B. P. O. Elks, and in 1928 was elected a member of the Carbon County School Board.

Mr. Leger married, November 7, 1917, Barbara Forrester, of Price. They have one daughter, Marie.

WILLIAM J. BOND is influential in community affairs in the City of Heber, judicial center of Wasatch County, where he is giving notably efficient administration as principal of the Wasatch High School and holds also the office of president of the board of trustees of the Wasatch County Public Library. Further interest attaches to his status as one of the loyal and progressive citizens of Heber by reason of the fact that he was here born and reared and is a scion, in the third generation, of one of the sterling and honored pioneer families of the Heber district, where his paternal grandparents were numbered among the earliest settlers, they having crossed the plains to Utah as members of one of the now historic handcart companies of colonists, in the year 1867, and having been zealous members of the Church of Latter Day Saints. William J. Bond was born at Heber on the 8th of February, 1889, and is a son of William H. and Alice (Taylor) Bond, both of whom were born in this district of Wasatch County, where they were reared to maturity and where William H. Bond was actively con-
